Dear Talenttac,

I am very much invested in myself through knowledge and perseverance, I create desktop applications in Visual Studio (C# and VB win-form applications) and web pages (HTML5, CSS3 and Java Script/TypeScript (started PHP recently)) – I am still learning, through the material I collect, be it on the internet or through actual books and endless YouTube tutorials.

Due to financial woes and situation at home, I have not yet been able to attain the qualifications that match my knowledge on Programming and of that to give you the employer confidence in my skills.

I was fortunate enough to get employment where I'm currently at, Ricoh South Africa, 3 years. I'm an onsite engineer for major accounts such as Sanlam, Sanlam Investments, Santam, Glacier Financial Services, however I have not been able to apply my skills in this career as it is more networking than programming, I do however work closely with Print Management Systems and 3rd party I.T. companies.

I also created a program (1 of many) that allows you to sign up and book accommodation and choose various products/services offered by the B&B I once worked at as a Part Time manager whilst I was studying. I never released the program as we struggled to get a server and funding from the B&B owner.
I've also created a C#/SQL application for the current company I'm at where users can log in and log calls (similar to service now).

Yours Sincerely
Zuko Tetyana